IRISH ACTRESS IN SOLO SHOW AT U. LOWELL

LOWELL, MASS. - Irish Actress Marie Kean will perform "Soft Morning City," a one-woman show featuring works of Yeats, Synge, MacNiece, and O'Casey, at the University of Lowell, on May 11. The city of Dublin provides the link between the 17 authors represented in this literary collage.

The two hour performance, free and open to the public, begins at 8:00 PM in Durgin Hall, located at Pawtucket and Wilder Streets in Lowell.

Miss Kean, a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company, was last seen in the United States with Peter O'Toole in Noel Coward's "Present Laughter". Her film credits include "Ryan's Daughter," "Barry Lyndon", and "The Great Catherine."

Marie Kean received her training at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, where she played in all the Irish classics for 12 years. "Soft Morning City," written by Miss Kean, has played throughout Europe. She won her first acting award in 1956 for "The Plough and the Stars" in Theatre de Nation in Paris, and has subsequently won both Acting and Television Award of the Year for Becket's "Happy Days."

"Soft Morning City" is presented by the University of Lowell in cooperation with the Irish American Cultural Institute.
